A NECKLACE OF FINS: MARINE GOODS TRADING IN MARITIME SOUTHEAST ASIA, 1780–1860

This paper explores the ocean produce trade that connected maritime East and Southeast Asia between 1780 and 1860. The essay explicitly concentrates on two of action where politics, commerce, and the trade in sea produce combined in powerful ways: the Straits of Melaka and the waters of Northern Borneo.

“As California goes, so goes the nation.” Whether fact or fable, the notion of California as a trend setter in social, environmental and legal arenas could well be tested once again in 2015. This may become another year that, in the rear view mirror, will be seen as a game changer in land use. In the legislature, in the courts and at city hall, California is addressing inclusionary affordable housing, climate change, sea level rise projections and drought in ways that are likely to change not just the pattern of land development, but also the day-to-day lives of Californians. Will other states follow California’s lead? It’s very possible. #LandUse

'Nearly a decade ago, #California policymakers, facing a frightening future of shriveling snow packs and rising seas, created the nation's most aggressive program to combat #GlobalWarming.

The 2006 law mandated broad reductions of greenhouse gas emissions by 2020. Now, as the deadline approaches, Gov. Jerry Brown and Democratic lawmakers are intensifying their efforts. They are crafting emissions-reduction targets for 2030 and 2050 that will be far more difficult to meet. One bill seeks to slash petroleum use in vehicles to levels not seen since Lyndon Johnson's presidency.

Yet as the debate continues, a number of questions remain unanswered. Among them: Will other states or nations follow California in pursuing deep emissions cuts?'
